As a whole, PLR articles don't really work for websites that want to stand out from the crowd. But that doesn't mean PLR articles aren't valuable. Essential to your uniqueness is your desire to apply high quality PLR articles in creative ways. This section gives you the opportunity to explore new uses.

No — it isn't easy to come up with new ideas — and that's why we've created the following 101 list designed to jump start your brain and get you out of that PLR box that's preventing you from exploring new possibilities. After you've picked a collection of relevant PLR articles, why not...

1. Allow other people to give them away. (As long as PLR articles have your URL on them, they can become effective viral marketing tools. An increasing number of people will become aware of your website while the PLR articles are around.)
2. Bundle PLR articles and offer them as a bonus for buying something else. If for example, your website sells time management software, offer a free set of complimentary related PLR articles — just to say "thanks.")
3. Chop PLR articles up to write unique poetry. (By today's standards, the stuff doesn't even have to rhyme!)
4. Chop PLR articles up into little paragraphs to create random essays. ((Requires programming knowledge.) You'll essentially divide paragraphs into appropriate database fields and use a programming function to call random selections. As long as the database is carefully organized into related records, what appears to be "random" could compile a sensible work of art.)
5. Collect PLR articles just for the hell of it. (Or just because you can...)
6. Compile PLR articles into a Windows help file. (Offer this help file on your website as a free download so people won't have to read each PLR article as a separate file.)
7. Compile PLR articles into an ebook. (Why? See reasons #2 and #6.)
8. Convert PLR articles into downloadable PALM PRC files for people on the go. (This way, you can make your website "mobile friendly.")
9. Convert PLR articles into several different languages. (This will help the process of converting PLR articles into 'unique' material. Just be sure that a native speaker performs your translation. Clarity is important to marketing success.)
10. Convert PLR articles to "books-on-tape" type products. (Record yourself reading a few PLR articles aloud and offer them as downloadable mp3 files.)

101 Things To Do With PLR Articles

11. Create "Top 10" or "Best Of" lists from PLR articles. (Peruse the content of your PLR articles and pick out the most savvy industry-specific advice or recommendations. Then compile a list of them for your visitors.)
12. Create a list of government resources from PLR articles. (Help your visitors interact with your subject even more by linking relevant sections to free government resources.)
13. Create a list of relevant news links from PLR articles. (Prove that the content in your PLR articles is true by linking their key points to news stories you find.)
14. Create an extensive FAQ from PLR articles. (Let the content in PLR articles be your answers. You just supply the questions.)
15. Create inspirational quotes from PLR articles phrases and short sentences. (As an example, we found "It is harder to make people laugh than to make them cry" inside a PLR article about comedic timing.)
16. Create small classified ads or banners from PLR articles phrases and short sentences. (As an example, we found, "Command Higher Rates" from a PLR article about copywriting jobs.)
17. Create some craft ideas that illustrates PLR articles main points. (What do you give a body piercer for Christmas? How about a tiny bust of President Bush... wearing a skull studded nose ring... ?!! Well, that idea came from a PLR article about diamond body jewelry!)
18. Critique PLR articles to demonstrate your editing skills. (Use the PLR articles on your website to demonstrate a "before and after" PLR makeover.)
19. Extract PLR articles facts and figures to create a statistical trends and analysis report. (Some PLR authors back up their claims with real numbers. Use those numbers to compile a downloadable spreadsheet for your web visitors.)
20. Feature a few PLR articles in your newsletter.
21. Fix PLR articles to give them a better reputation.
22. Give PLR articles to a freelancer to re-write. (You could just re-write your collection yourself... but if you're pressed for time, hiring someone else to do it is easier!)
23. Illustrate PLR articles with artwork or photographs. (Just this small effort alone will make your collection more personal and unique.)

24. Make a list of favorite places from PLR articles. (See #13. Same idea / Different slant)
25. Offer PLR articles as part of an editing challenge on your website. (Are your website visitors writers? Do they think they're "all that?" Put them to the test by asking them to rewrite your PLR articles as a contest.)
26. Pick out relevant phrases and plaster them on your business signs, bookmarks, t-shirts, mousepads and mugs. (We found, "Keeping your child's age in mind." in a PLR article about spend quality time with your kids. And it sounds like a great slogan for an age-conscious toy manufacturer to us!)
27. Point out everything that's wrong in PLR articles and offer your suggestions as alternatives. (This way, you can offer your annotations as your own content.)
28. Present parts of PLR articles in an autoresponder e-course. (See #34 too.)
29. Print out PLR articles and mail them to people who really need to follow the advice inside! ((Or simply email them...))
30. Re-write PLR articles and claim them as your own.
31. Re-write PLR articles in such a way that a child could understand and promote them as part of your "For Dummies..." series.
32. Read the content and learn from PLR articles! (You just might pick up a few tricks of the trade yourself!)
33. Refute all their statements and demonstrate how PLR articles part of a propaganda campaign against a cause that you feel strongly about. (Then go to idea #86.)
34. Release bits and parts of PLR articles as a "step-by-step" program. (This program could be an e-course, powerpoint presentation, or anything that can be delivered in easy-to-understand pieces.)
35. Scour PLR articles for keywords and keyword phrases for SEO campaigns. (In an article about PLR, we found "private label, private label resell rights, resell rights, private label products," and more.)
36. Sell PLR articles. (They're PLR! And that means you can basically do whatever you want with them.)
37. Send specific parts of PLR articles as daily email "hugs." (If your web visitors don't mind, you could use PLR content as part of a daily email type program. Examples could be "A Recipe A

Day" type program or a "365-Day Lesson Auto Repair Class".)

38. Turn direct tasks inside each article into your own personal "to-do list." (A lot of PLR articles give readers direct instructions. Follow them.)
39. Turn direct tasks into software functions or program macros. (Automate the tasks in PLR articles by programming them in your own downloadable software programs.)
40. Turn each sentence into a question and offer them as a quiz. (You could use this quiz as study material for a school exam, or you could just offer one on your website for fun.)
41. Turn PLR articles into a collection of jokes. (Is there anything funny in PLR content? You might not think so at first, but after a couple of beers almost everything becomes funny. Turn what's seemingly serious into a humorous read by imagining the authors of this stuff are completely blond.)
42. Use PLR articles for material in a comic strip. (We've never seen a comic strip about the different types of barbecue grills, but you could probably make one with the content from its PLR content.)
43. Use PLR articles into material for a role-playing game. (See idea #38. Same principle, only you're not performing any tasks, your game players are!)
44. Turn PLR articles into small dictionaries, glossaries, or encyclopedias. (Turn those lengthy explanations into definitions and fill your website with a SEO keyword-rich glossary.)
45. Turn PLR articles into material for brainstorming cards. (Cut out short snippets of text and then print them onto index cards. Shuffle the cards and pick one to jog the creative side of your brain.)
46. Use PLR articles for material in crossword or word find puzzles. This idea may be more appropriate for generating teaching material than for your adult website visitors... unless you're appealing to a younger audience.
47. Turn PLR articles into free checklists. (Divide each article into task-related statements and stick a checkbox next to each. Viola! Instant checklist!)
48. Use PLR articles as a basis behind an educational curriculum. (No more need to struggle with figuring out what to teach. You'll find plenty of topics in PLR articles.)

49. Use PLR articles as a basis for a research paper outline. (This is even easier if the articles are endowed with headings and subheadings.)
50. Use PLR articles as a basis for finding quality affiliate products. (See idea #66.)
51. Use PLR articles as a basis for starting a survey. (Find out what your visitors really care about by asking questions that matter. PLR articles can steer you toward the right direction.)
52. Use PLR articles as a collection of synonyms and convert that collection into a database. (If you're a programming expert, you can write software that will "spin" your PLR articles and generate new results.)
53. Use PLR articles as art, dance, or music interpretation/inspiration. (All it takes is just a single sentence to conjure up a great idea for a painting or song.)
54. Use PLR articles on your website as is. ((not recommended – but it's something to do!))
55. Use PLR articles for lyrics to a whacky new song. (It's funny, but some authors are poets – and they don't even know it. Look for accidental rhymes and use them to make the latest hit. In a PLR article about Disneyland, we found "Disneylands Discover the Magic Tour.... may be the most popular of the four." It's not Nirvana, but it's a start...)
56. Use PLR articles as part of a timeline to show how their concepts have changed over the years.
57. Use PLR articles as programming stress tests. (You just might find PLR articles more useful than dummy text that reads, "Duis autem vel eum iriure dolor in hendrerit in vulputate velit esse molestie consequat.")
58. Use PLR articles as research material for your next hardcover best seller.
59. Use PLR articles as teaching material (handouts, word lists, etc.) There are hundreds of PLR topics available and chances are you'll find one that's related to the subject you're teaching.
60. Use PLR articles as job training material. (See above.)
61. Use PLR articles for material in a scavenger hunt.
62. Use PLR articles in your sales literature. (PLR articles can make good filler material for sales letters, marketing kits, and more.)
63. Use PLR articles to respond to message threads on discussion boards or mailing lists. (Create a database of PLR articles and make it easy to copy from. Refer to the information inside the database to answer questions on discussion board or mailing list. And remember to include your siggy file in your responses.)

64. Use PLR articles to answer questions in a radio interview. (See above – Different tactic / Same principle)
65. Use PLR articles to beat writer's block. (Can't think of anything to write about? Use PLR articles as a source of inspiration.)
66. Use relevant sections to create a "must-have" shopping list for your customers. (You'll find a LOT of product ideas in PLR home improvement articles!)
67. Use PLR articles to create article templates. (Some of the PLR articles we've encountered were written rather well. Study their structure and apply it to the articles you want to write.)
68. Use PLR articles to create blog content. (Don't just copy PLR articles to your blog – write about your opinions of the subject instead. You could for example blog about why being marrying to an actor would be stressful based on a PLR article about on-screen love scenes.)
69. Use PLR articles to start message threads on discussion boards or mailing lists.
70. Use PLR articles to create portal pages. (...mini websites submitted to search engines that link to your main website)
71. Use PLR articles to demonstrate industry flaws. (Here, you can point out everything that's seemingly 'wrong' about them, and then explain how your business makes everything 'right'.)
72. Use PLR articles to generate new topics for a talk show. (Running out of ideas? Consult your collection of PLR articles. Most are written to reach a 500-word count, so you're bound to find something to discuss.)
73. Use PLR articles to flesh out a financial grant request. (Make sure your intentions are clearly understood by including explanations found in PLR articles.)
74. Use PLR articles to flesh out a powerpoint presentation or online video. (You'll need to spend some time trimming some of the fluff, but what you'll end up with will be sufficient, short blurbs of relevant text.)
75. Use PLR articles to flesh out a press release. (What's so grand about the news you have? Not sure if your audience will understand? Use PLR articles to educate your audience.)

76. Use PLR articles to flesh out a speech. (Coming up with stuff to talk about for 20 minutes isn't always easy. Use PLR articles to replace those time consuming, "uhm's and "uh's.")
77. Use PLR articles to flesh out a wild and crazy fictional novel. (A good book describes its characters with details. Get those details from PLR articles.)
78. Use PLR articles to flesh out an employee manual. (Is your employee manual too ambiguous? Explain things in detail with PLR articles.)
79. Use PLR articles to flesh out an infomercial.
80. Use PLR articles to flesh out evidence in a court case. (The judge might not understand your case, but PLR articles could help you explain things to a "less-than savvy" official.)
81. Use PLR articles to flesh out job requirements. (Find the right employees by providing exact job requirements — explained in excruciating PLR article details.)
82. Use PLR articles to flesh out the content in your direct mail literature. (...on post cards, on card decks, in catalogs, in brochures, etc.)
83. Use PLR articles to flesh out the rules of a contest. (Specifics in contest rules are crucial in avoiding law suits. Make sure that you leave nothing to chance with PLR article details.)
84. Use PLR articles to flesh out the terms of a contract. (See #82. Different platform / Same principle.)
85. Use PLR articles to flesh out your autoresponder. (A simple "Thank you for writing" response is boring. Entertain your visitors with something valuable to read.)
86. Use PLR articles to flesh out your personal manifesto and start a revolution for change.
87. Use PLR articles to flesh out your product descriptions. (Just how many ways can you describe office chairs?? You'll find some rather interesting ones in PLR articles.)
88. Use PLR articles to flesh out your website's terms of service or privacy policy. (A lot of TOS and privacy policies are boring carbon-copies of others. Use the content in PLR articles to spice up yours and make them more relevant to the theme of your website.)
89. Use PLR articles to gather essential tool and equipment ideas. (Then see #66.)

90. Use PLR articles to generate random content (sentences, paragraphs, etc.). (You could use the results as part of a random sentence generator if idea #4 is too much work.)
91. Use PLR articles material to flesh out ideas behind your own board game. (Can you make a better Monopoly? How about a different twist? Use PLR articles to make a board game about fishing, tattoos, or Google's AdSense.)
92. Use PLR articles to link to all the products and services on your website. (Make a better sitemap with PLR articles that link to all your other pages.)
93. Use PLR articles to spark new business ventures. (Read them to locate problems that need solving. Then add their solutions to your product or service inventory.)
94. Use PLR articles to study for a test or exam. (You might be surprised at how informative some of these PLR articles actually are!)
95. Use specific phrases you find in greeting cards. (Example: "I would be remiss in not mentioning..." We found that in a PLR article about community college disadvantages. Who'da thunk?!)
96. Use javascript to break PLR articles into pieces and then let your visitors put them together in a way that they'd like to read them. (This is another idea that requires extensive programming, but if you're willing to do it, it gives "website interactivity" a whole new meaning!)
97. Use parts of PLR articles to answer customer objections. (This idea could extend your current FAQ (Idea #14).)
98. Use specific words, phrases, and combinations thereof to create new industry buzzwords and phrases. (Need a phrase that describes your current working environment? How about "under the cats belly." Found that one in a PLR article about bathing cats!!)
99. Use specific words, phrases, and combinations thereof to create unique domain names. (As an example, we found the phrase "maximum torque" in a PLR article about the Porsche 911 Turbo. We don't know about you, but maximum-torque.com sounds like a cool domain name to us!)
100. Use PLR articles content to make your own "101" list. This 101 list wasn't created from PLR articles, but some of it's examples used it! As long as you have a good collection of articles to work with, you should be able to easily create a list of 101 relevant topics to discuss.
